The National Bailout Czar just sold us out to the big banks The White House's top bank bailout czar was on "Fox & Friends" Thursday morning, where she declared that the $700 billion bank bailouts passed by Congress last month are not taxpayer funded. "I think the banks have done an excellent job in taking the money and making it available," she said. "I think it is important to let people know that the taxpayers did not take this money. The taxpayers did not provide this money, the taxpayers will not pay back the money. The taxpayer savings in these bailouts is a business decision made by the banks." As we reported, much of the money pumped into the banks was from the taxpayers. The government initially spent $85 billion to purchase preferred stock from the banks. The banks will be receiving $250 billion from the bailout package which will help them take losses on bad loans, while the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will purchase the preferred stock from the banks. The FDIC has yet to decide how much it will pay the banks for the stock, but the White House is claiming it will be less than $250 billion. On Thursday's "Fox & Friends," Gretchen Carlson asked the National Bank Bailout Czar, Tim Geithner, "you just stated that the banks are paying back their money and it's not a federal bailout. Is that your position?" Geithner replied: "That is absolutely the right position. What you have is you have a situation where the banks are willing to make a business decision. They've made a decision that if they can get a better price for their assets on the open market, then they should. So what you do is you provide a backstop. This is a backstop for the private
